

COLORADO DIVISION OF WILDLIFE

South Platte Research State Wildlife Areas 2009

Small Game and Waterfowl

RESEARCH PROPERTY GUIDE

Continuing in 2009, the Colorado Division of Wildlife will operate mandatory check-out stations at seven State Wildlife Areas (SWAs) in northeastern Colorado: Atwood SWA, Bravo SWA, Brush SWA, Jackson Lake SWA, Jean K. Tool SWA, Overland Trail SWA, and Red Lion SWA. For each of these properties, hunter access must occur only through a designated parking area. During the regular duck hunting season framework (Oct. 3, 2009 through Jan. 24, 2010), all waterfowl and small game hunters using these SWAs must check out at the mandatory check station before leaving the property. Deer and turkey hunters are not required to check out at the check stations on these properties. Check stations will not be operated before Oct. 3 or after Jan. 24, 2010. In addition to the check-out requirement, regulations limit hunter numbers on some of these SWAs. This brochure provides the waterfowl and small game regulations for these properties, and provides maps showing the locations of the mandatory check stations.

Why require check stations? The Division of Wildlife is evaluating if hunting restrictions improve numbers of waterfowl using a SWA, harvest success (number of waterfowl or small game harvested per hunter), and hunter satisfaction. The Division of Wildlife will gather this information by interviewing waterfowl and small game hunters as they check out at the check station.

Why these State Wildlife Areas? We are interested in evaluating the effect of hunting restrictions on a cross-section of SWAs within the South Platte River valley. We have paired SWAs that have similar habitat conditions; one SWA in each pair will have no additional restrictions on waterfowl and small game hunting (check station only), and the other SWA will have additional hunting restrictions. Jackson Lake and Red Lion SWAs represent properties away from the river channel with shallow wetland impoundments, Atwood and Overland Trail SWAs represent small properties along the river, while Bravo and Brush/Jean K. Tool SWAs (combined) represent larger properties along the river with more habitat diversity.

What are the check-out procedures? After finishing their hunt, waterfowl and small game hunters must report to the check station. A check station attendant will usually be present. The attendant will record the hunting license numbers of all hunters in each hunting party, and the number and species of waterfowl and small game harvested by each. The attendant will also ask hunters several questions about their hunting methods, experiences, and satisfaction. The entire check-out procedure should take less than five minutes per hunting party. If an attendant is not present at the check station, check-out cards will be provided at the check station for each hunter to record this information.

Are these changes permanent? The evaluation of hunting regulations on these seven SWAs is expected to take up to six hunting seasons. The check stations will be operated each year throughout the evaluation. After 2-3 years, the waterfowl and small game hunting regulations will be switched between the SWAs in each pair. At the end of the evaluation, the Division of Wildlife will use the results to make recommendations to the Colorado Wildlife Commission about future hunting
