INTRODUCTION

The role of financial institutions is always a significant factor in supporting the economic activity and growth of an area. This is particularly true in connection with the stimulus and support that is timely and available to capitalize on opportunities that present themselves and need the assurance of financial support. The Arkansas Valley is probably no different than any other area in that it presents wide contrasts in the nature and kinds of financial support given to the various communities.

A number of difficulties are apparent in attempting to analyze the subject of financial services. Representatives of banks as well as businessmen are reluctant to reveal their true attitudes and as would be expected pertinent information regarding financial matters of a given organization. Much of the statistical data is purposely arranged to prevent disclosure of financial information, except on a composite basis. Many financial arrangements are very subjective, depending on the propensity of a given individual or the attitude of a conservative or liberal board of review.

A general analysis of the Arkansas Valley would indicate the following relative to financial services:

1. Banking in Colorado Springs seems to be almost completely devoted to the immediate area and dominated by a very select group. Little interest is shown in the Arkansas Valley area, and in fact outside of Teller County there seems to be little identification with the area as an interrelated economic unit.
2. The city of Pueblo identifies itself with the Arkansas Valley and sees progress for Pueblo as the economic hub of the entire area, except for Colorado Springs. The difference between Colorado Springs and Pueblo is well illustrated by the indifference of banking interests in the two cities to each other.
3. Many of the smaller communities in the lower Arkansas Valley, which Pueblo would count as their supporters, are not particularly pleased with their financial relationships in Pueblo. This might be explained as a feeling that they are being exploited by Pueblo interests rather than being given help to aid in their own development.
4. Adequate housing is a very critical factor in nearly all the communities except Colorado Springs and Pueblo. It is difficult to determine why housing development has not been better supported by financial interests, but it is probably a case of more attractive alternatives elsewhere. Even local savings and loan offices seem to lean heavily to collections at the local level with investment elsewhere.

5. Several communities seemed to depend heavily on private sources of capital for business investment and support and to use banks primarily for working capital and checking account services. In one case it was indicated that the loss of one private source due to a death had created a real void for needed long-term capital.
6. Many smaller banks in the smaller towns are very conservative and have achieved what would probably be described as "equilibrium." They are limited in size of loans by their own size, and are financing businesses which in themselves are conservative and are the survivors of considerable change and upheaval throughout the local business structure.
7. Generally trends in the areas of finance studied are comparable to changes in other related indicators. Thus the Valley has had growth in loans, investment and expansion of credit unions and savings and loan organizations. In spite of deficiencies in certain geographical areas and within certain kinds of institutions, the over-all picture is quite good. This latter fact, however, reflects the dominance of Colorado Springs and Pueblo in the over-all totals.

BANKING

There are a total of 39 Federal and State banks in the 15-county Arkansas Valley area. Of this total, 12 are located in Colorado Springs and Pueblo. A review of Tables 1 through 5, relating to banking, shows that the area has dropped in bank deposits from about 18% to 15% from 1947 to 1965, compared to Colorado as a whole. The low point during this period was just over 14%. Loans and discounts have decreased somewhat more, falling from 17.1% of the state total in 1955 to 13.6% in 1964.

The low point was 19% in 1947. Bank deposits by cities includes data from 1957 to 1963, and shows the dominance of Colorado Springs and Pueblo. Increases in deposits were most marked from 1958 to 1959 and from 1960 to 1961. From 1961 to 1963, there was a dip in 1962 and a return to a slightly higher level in 1963.

Bank debits (bank debits to demand deposits) as an indication of checks clearing, for the period 1955 to 1964, follows a rather consistent pattern compared to Colorado figures, except for 1956 and 1957. In these two years there was a substantial drop, which was regained in 1958.

No detailed data on consumer finance companies was available, but Table 5 is presented to show the actual number of establishments. Again, the dominance of Colorado Springs and Pueblo is shown as compared to the other communities.

CREDIT UNIONS

A very interesting development in the financial structure is indicated by Tables 7 and 8. These recap the growth in state and federal chartered credit unions. Detail is given as to each state credit union from 1960 to 1964 and federal credit unions from 1952 to 1964, with 1959 missing. In both categories, there has been exceptional growth in members, shares and loans. This is a reflection of the popularity of this form of saving for members and the ability of these organizations to secure loans for a wide variety of consumer financing.

The federal chartered credit unions have had the largest growth, gaining in their total period nearly 30,000 members, while those state chartered credit unions gained 5,401 in a shorter period of time.

SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS

Savings and loan associations are also divided between federal and state charters. It is difficult to determine the local effect of this kind of investment, because savings deposited locally are frequently invested elsewhere. The general pattern, however, indicates a steady consistent growth on sizable amounts, very similar to that experienced by the credit unions. Net assets increases for the federal group in the Arkansas Valley amounted to over $46,000,000 for the period from 1950 to 1964. Growth in the state group was a lesser per cent increase in the 15-county group than in the state as a whole, but was still very substantial.
