SUBJECT: Special License Plates

This memorandum provides information on special license plates offered in Colorado. Specifically, this memorandum discusses:

- background on special license plates;
- procedures for establishing new special license plates;
- statutory requirements for the administration of special license plates;
- fees and revenue for special license plates; and
- sample state revenue and expenditures for a new special license plate.

Background

Colorado offers a variety of license plates in the following categories: regular, designer, personalized, special, and other. A special license plate, sometimes referred to as a "logo plate," is distinguished from other license plates by non-standard colors, graphics, or wording. Colorado categorizes special license plates as alumni, group special, and military.

Types of special license plates. There are currently 67 designs of special license plates, half of which were added between 2005 and 2011. During the 2011 legislative session, the General Assembly added six new designs, which will become available in January 2012. Special license plates by category include:

- alumni - 13 designs;
- group special - 23 existing and 5 pending designs; and
- military - 31 existing and 1 pending design.

Special license plate registrations in Colorado. According to the Department of Revenue (DOR), as of May 31, 2011, there were a total of 5.1 million vehicles registered in the state. Of that number, just over 400,000 vehicles are registered with special license plates. Table 1 shows special license plate registrations by category.

Special license plates in other states. Among all 50 states, Maryland and Texas offer the most special license plates with several hundred designs each, while New Hampshire offers the fewest with six designs.¹ As shown in Attachment 1, Colorado — currently offering 67 group special, military, and university license plates — ranks 24th among all states in number of special license plates.

Procedures for Establishing New Special License Plates

Except for alumni plates, which are created through an administrative process in the DOR, all new special license plates are now established by legislation, which details eligibility, fees, and other requirements. The process for establishing a new special license plate differs by category, as described below.

¹The definition of "special license plate" varies by state.

Alumni associations. Under current law, an association may apply to the DOR for a new special license plate once it has written commitments from at least 500 persons and agrees to pay design costs prior to production. Each association establishes the criteria for eligibility, which may include membership requirements or contributions payable to the association. Alumni plates are subject to standard plate fees (described below) and may be repealed if less than 500 sets are issued.²

Group special. State law requires that, prior to the introduction of a bill to establish a new special license plate, the person, group, or organization proposing the new plate must submit a proposal to the DOR and certify that at least 3,000 sets will be issued within one year following authorization. Group special license plates may not be issued to for-profit business entities.³

Military. Military special license plates are also established by legislation and available for passenger cars, trucks, motorcycles, and recreational vehicles under 16,000 pounds. In many cases, an additional $25 issuance fee, (discussed below), is not applied to military special license plates.⁴

Statutory Requirements for the Administration of Special License Plates

Administration of special license plates is delegated to the DOR, which has rule-making authority.⁵ Under current law, the department:

- is required to submit a proposal for new group special license plates by March 1 and certify that each applicant has obtained the required number of signatures;⁶
- is authorized to set standards⁷ and approve most designs⁸ for new license plates; and
- is required to report to the General Assembly before March 1 each year on its activities, revenues, purchases and expenses, and any recommendations for legislative changes.⁹

Discontinuation of special license plates. The DOR is also authorized to retire, and in some cases not renew, special license plates that don't meet issuance or registration thresholds. Generally, state law specifies the required minimums, which are typically 3,000 sets.¹⁰ Table 2 shows special license plate styles that have been discontinued or retired.

Fees and Revenue

Special license plate revenue is typically generated by one-time fees collected upon plate issuance. These fees are in addition to any required moneys by an alumni association or group, or other statutorily required fees, such as the license plate and tab fee paid by all vehicle owners. Although some, including certain military plates, are exempt from some or all fees, most special license plates require:

- a $25 fee, credited to the Licensing Services Cash Fund (LSCF);
- a $25 fee, credited to the Highway Users Tax Fund (HUTF);¹¹ and
- other plate-specific fees required by statute.

How fee revenue is used. HUTF moneys are continuously appropriated to the Colorado Department of Transportation and allocated for state highways (65 percent) and distributed to counties and cities (35 percent). LSCF moneys are appropriated to the DOR for personal services and operating expenses of driver's license offices.

Revenue. Special license plates have generated a cumulative $16.3 million in state revenue, an average of $1.8 million per year. Special license plate revenue varies according to plate, and is detailed in Attachment 2. Table 3 shows special license plates by highest average annual revenue.

State Notes

*Maryland has over 700 plates categorized as "organizational." It is not clear how many of these designs meet Colorado's definition of special.

Colorado -- Does not include special plates added in the 2011 legislative session since the plates are not available until 2012.

Other Notes

While some states consider antique, governmental, and other plates to be "special," these were excluded to match Colorado criteria.

Professional, occupational, regional, emergency services, and others plates were included when open to anyone or actually a service organization.

Staff surveyed the motor vehicle registration websites on June 24, 2011, to obtain counts. Motorcycle duplicates are excluded.
